The stock market continued to exhibit a reactionary tendency to-day, but declines were small and final losses insignificant in the majority of issues. From to-day's slight reaction it did not appear safe to argue that further operations for the short account would be successful, as the decline was not based upon any unfavorable developments, nor was there anything in the situation to warrant extensive dealings on the short side of the market. General influences remained favorable, and encouraging to a continued investment demand. To-day's reactions were not easily brought about. The internawere not easily brought about. The international shares were marked down, also the anthracite shares, while the list in general followed the lower tendency. From to-day's operations and course of prices many careful observers of the market believed that the reaction might go a point or more further, to be followed by another upward movement; but no one believed that the current demand for stocks had been satisfied, or that reactions would be more than temporary. Many intending buyers did not go into the market to-day, waiting for possible lower prices on the reaction, and, although transactions were well above those of a few weeks ago, they were under recent comparatively heavy dealings. London houses were moderate sellers, but the bulk of the selling was for the local professional account. Early prices, as a rule, were strong, and the greatest depression was toward the close, with the principal weakness in Jersey Central, Reading first preferred, Burlington, St. Paul, Northwest, Western Union, Missouri Pacific, Tennessee Coal, Northern Pacific preferred, Kansas and Texas preferred and Louisville and Nashville. Delaware and Hudson recovered nearly a point at the close from the lowest price of the day. Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis preferred, and the local gas securities, Consolidated Gas excepted, were generally higher at the close.

Prices for the last sales of the principal active tional shares were marked down, also the anthe close.
